From the day when Queen Victoria issued here proclamation of neutrality, and Lord John Russell subsequently acknowledged the rights of "belligerenta" as attaching to the Government of the Confederate States, public opinion in the South has been fully satisfied that the pretended blocksde of our ports would last only so long as it may prove convenient to British interests. The very wise and politic reservation of her majesty, that the blockade, to insure respect, must be "legal and complete," was a premonition of the future attitude of her govrealms of Yankeedom.
